Chairman Bulova to Serve on Governor's Ethics Commission

September 25, 2014

Richmond, VA – Today, Governor Terry McAuliffe appointed Chairman Sharon Bulova to the Governor's Commission on Integrity and Public Confidence in State Government. The 10-member commission will recommend policy reforms to create a better state government that will attract high-quality leaders and ensure superior service for the next generation of Virginians.

"I am honored to serve on the Governor's Commission to restore integrity, public confidence, and trust in the Commonwealth of Virginia. I look forward to working together with members of the commission to discuss ethics reform," Chairman Bulova said.

When describing members of the commission, Governor McAuliffe said, "They are bipartisan and represent a cross section of political parties. They are pragmatists and problem-solvers. Most important, they are individuals with the highest credibility and integrity."

The commission will discuss ethics reforms regarding gifts and disclosures for the next two months. An interim report with detailed recommendations will be published this December. In 2015, the commission will focus on other topics such as campaign finance, selection and service of judges, gubernatorial terms and other issues raised by the commission and members of the public.
